

Tim Stimpson

Tim played 19 times for England between 1996 and 2002. His top score was 107 points for the British Lions in 1997 on their successful tour of South Africa, and he was the first player in the English Premiership to score over 1000 points. The only player to win 5 successive Premierships, he also helped kick his Leicester Tigers team to Heineken European Cup Championships in 2001 and 2002.

Tim gained an Honours degree in Anthropology from Durham University. He worked in business training with ICI, was an executive board member of the PRA and Head Coach at Nottingham. He is now working with St James's Place Wealth Management. He is also the founder of Sports Welfare, ambassador for the children's charities Sparks, The Wooden Spoon and the Christina Noble Foundation.

Tim is 34 and now lives in London.
